Videogame chip specialist Nvidia Corp. NVDA -3.88% ▼ said Thursday that revenue climbed 55% in its latest quarter, reaching a record for a three-month period.

Nvidia, based in Santa Clara, Calif., is known for graphics processing units used in gaming software, and has expanded in new sectors ranging from virtual reality to self-driving cars.

Over all, for the quarter ended Jan. 29, net income was $655 million, or 99 cents a share, compared with $542 million, or 83 cents a share, a year earlier. Excluding certain items, earnings rose to $1.13 a share from 94 cents. Analysts had expected 83 cents a share, according to Thomson Reuters.

Revenue increased 55% to $2.17 billion, compared with Nvidia's guidance of between $2.06 billion and $2.14 billion. Analysts expected $2.11 billion.

For the current quarter, the company expects revenue of $1.9 billion, plus or minus 2%, roughly in line with expectations.

Shares, which have more than quadrupled in value in the past 12 months, slipped 2.1% to $113.96 after hours.
